

Photo Sharing and Your Reputation

Test yourself by working through the following scenarios.

SCENARIO #1

You are the manager of a successful business, and you want to hire young adults. Since they will represent you and your company, you expect that those you hire will conduct themselves responsibly.

Now, imagine that one of your good friends has come to apply for a job. Below, name the real-life friend you are thinking of hiring.

Name: _____

Next, go to your friend's online photo-sharing account, review his or her pictures and comments, and answer these questions:

Would this person help or hurt the reputation of my company?

Based on what I see, would I hire this person for the job?

SCENARIO #2

You are going on a job interview. The man you hope will be your future employer is the manager of a successful business. He would like to hire young adults. Because those he hires will represent him and the company, he expects them to conduct themselves responsibly.

If you're allowed to have an online photo-sharing account, go to your account and—being as objective as you can—write down what your potential employer might think of you based on your posts and comments.

---

---

---

---

---

Photos can send mixed signals about someone's reputation. For example, the person in the image above could be viewed in two ways.

- A. Brave
- B. Foolhardy

For each image, write down two possible descriptions of the person's reputation.

- A. _____
- B. _____

- A. _____
- B. _____

